There is something about Autumn that brings a rush of excitement which floods the brain with memories of warm meals around the table, nights cuddling on the sofa, the glow of a flickering candle light and the smell of freshly harvested roasted vegetables that fill you with such warmth and comfort.

It is with the first sight of an orange leaf that you will be digging out all those beloved jumpers and cosy wools, layering up and snuggling beneath the mountains of scarves, peaking out just enough to see the stunning melting pot of lively oranges and exuberant yellows. It is easy to see where the inspiration for Autumn was drawn from. Autumn is perhaps one special time where you can experience leaf crunching walks unknowingly prolonged, distracted by the very literal inspiration in every mid-orange, deep red, dusty yellow leaf that falls before your eyes: inspiring 'Honey', 'Golden Cider' and 'Fall Harvest'.

What is better is knowing you can return home and bury oneself in woollen blankets, sprawled before the blaring fireplace with a candle lit in the corner while sipping on a hot spiced drink and a generous plate of stem ginger cookies sensually adorning the coffee table.

Next comes the comforting aroma of an autumn stew that has been mingling and maturing in flavours for the past four hours. The stew is accompanied by a sweet background smell of caramelised onions and neighbouring vegetables roasting away, wafting in the air, carrying the promise of a warm hearty meal.

Lastly, everyone knows that when you are deep into Autumn, every coffee shop you seek warmth in has a special spiced latte on offer. The latte that you just cannot quite resist: prompting 'Spiced Coco'.
