INSPIRATION & INFLUENCES

The evenings start to lose their light and trees shed their leaves. There is no bigger desire than fulfilling that craving of knowing Christmas is bringing all its festive joys and unity with all your loved ones. Whether big or small celebrations, Christmas is still a rare time of the year where spirits are high and mince pies are in an abundance.

The influence for the Winter palette begins with those frosty mornings that lead into bright wilful days. The sun is low and the sky is a crisp colour of 'Apricity', speckled with the colour of 'Gratitude'. These are what I call cold fruitful days. The temperature feel like a startling friendly wake me up: filling you with all the energy you need to crunch those errands. These include buying presents to wrap for going under the tree, preparing the mince pies and pouring the sherry ready for Santa's appearance. Another great inspiration for the Winter palette is 'Pine Needle', this colour undoubtedly evokes the image of the hardy carnivorous winter trees. These beautiful yuletide trees that deal with all our fancy trimmings and glittering lights.

The next series of colours were inspired from across the waters. When your Pinterest page begins to fill with gorgeous winter cabins and Scandinavian winter holidays: we long for a week tucked away in a humble winter cabin. The rooves are the colour of 'Scandinavian Blue', the walls drown in 'Festive Fleece' and blessing the white washed woods with their abundant spotting's of colour.

There is always lots of fun to be had in the snow: no matter your age. It is a joyful sight followed by the comfort of retreating back to the open fire for a tall mug of mulled wine or a hot chocolate smothered in melting marshmallows.
